WE STRAIN THESE SERVICES NEEDLESSLY

Because we live in an emotionally under educated world.

The world depends upon these honorable professionals to reduce further damage caused by society's limited emotional intelligence (EI) education. Given the phenomenal human, emotional, and economic costs of these services, we have a myriad of reasons to embrace emotionally intelligent ideals.

Behavioral researchers have discovered that healthy mind development involves our studying the complexities of emotions and their troubling natural tendencies. Our EQ measures how smartly we manage these emotional dynamics, and such knowledge is paramount to creating a safer and more peaceful world. EI training greatly improves our ability to evaluate emotional criteria in the reasoning process.

Our too limited understanding is the basis of many problems that disrupt the quality of personal and professional relationships, as well as more worldly kinships. We are challenged to examine our minds in more scholarly ways, as we begin to recognize that emotional intelligence is a necessary scholastic endeavor. Without such know-how, ill-measured emotions may often seem justified, no matter how damaging. Consider the emotional challenges that have impeded your own ability to master healthier behaviors.

For improving your awareness, research emotional intelligence on the Internet, or at your local library or book store. This EI campaign is an international effort, sponsored by the Emotional Intelligence Institute, a non-profit organization that offers free Internet training to help people improve their EQ, www.e-ii.org.
